Comments from the portfolio manager

July was mainly dominated by a flow of news related to politics in various countries. On the equity markets, prices ended the month relatively unchanged (+1.50% overall), though with significant differences from so-called growth sectors, which weighed on the overall market performance, as opposed to more defensive ones. Thus, after reaching new record highs in mid-July, share prices followed a downward trend due to concerns about the state of the world's economy in general and in the US in particular, affecting the information technology sector for example.

The results of the elections in the UK, with a new Prime Minister (Mr Keir Starmer) from the Labour party and in France, where the outcome of the votes denied the far-right party "Rassemblement National" to reach a majority, removed some (though not all) investor uncertainties. Separately, President Biden announced his withdrawal from the presidential election campaign. It is therefore Vice President Kamala Harris who will face Mr Donald Trump in November. Overall, this switch has been well received by the financial markets.

Ongoing concerns over the weakening US economy pushed bond yields lower. For example, the yield on the US 10-year government bond dropped to 4.03% from 4.40%. This in turn supported bond prices. On a global basis, the bond market gained 2.80% in July.
